The authors describe the case of a female child with bilateral optic nerve head amyloid angiopathy, progressive visual loss, and bitemporal hemianopsia, who was treated with lenalidomide during a period of two years. The child's visual acuity was progressively decreased to counting fingers in the right eye and 5/10 in the left eye. Ophthalmologic examination showed bilateral retrobulbar optic disc swelling with a small optic cup and an elevated cup/disk ratio. Cerebral MRI revealed generalized cerebral cortical atrophy with loss of white matter signal and preservation of the gray matter. Cerebral and orbital Doppler were normal. A transjugular venous biopsy was performed and pathologic analysis showed amyloid deposits within the walls of small perforating and communicating vessels. The child was treated with 25 mg/day of lenalidomide for 2 years. Visual acuity improved bilaterally with enlargement of the cup of the optic disc and resolution of the retrobulbar optic disc swelling, which was still evident at 6 years of followup.HTLV-I associated myelopathy/tropical spastic paraparesis: lack of autoantibodies and evidence of defective lymph

Featuring images from a not-so-distant future, this is a video created by Yoda. In case you were wondering, Yoda's directorial debut is titled "In a Shadow of a Space Station." It takes place in a not-so-distant future in which the real world has been influenced by the Star Wars universe. The movie not only features some insanely pretty creatures—they look like something out of a dream or nightmare or both—but also the immortal red creature that, in order to protect itself from memory-wiping machines, created the Dyson sphere. Needless to say, the visuals are quite striking. The entire film was made using footage from real-life space missions. I wouldn't say this is one of Yoda's most effective films (it wasn't even nominated for an Academy Award), but it's still pretty fun to watch. Unfortunately, Yoda is doing his best to keep his voice in a vacuum, which results in a lot of different sounds at times. However, the new video is undoubtedly the most preposterous thing he's ever done. The clip, which was uploaded on June 5, has racked up more than 2 million views in two days. The funniest thing about the video is the scintillating opening narration. In case you don't 3e33713323
