It's a great way to check your mail, and view Twitter updates. Heck, if you're a Mac user, you can even use Apple's new FaceTime feature with your iPhone, if you turn on the feature. The web-cam software in the iPhone is great, but has a few issues that can make it a bit annoying. Over at Makeuseof.com, they've put together a great little article showing you how to add an instant messaging feature to your iPhone. It's really easy to do, and a great way to communicate when you're outside the office. So, here's the full instructions on how to do it: 1. Connect to your personal iPhone using the Personal Hotspot mode with your wireless carrier's data plan set up. 2. Open Settings from the Home screen. 3. Tap the General tab. 4. Tap the "+" button at the bottom of the General tab and add a new SIM. 5. Choose "Text Message" under the "Message and Data Services" field. 6. Type in your phone number that you usually use for instant messaging, then tap "Save". 7. If you're using a SIM card from T-Mobile, set your new SIM slot to "Preferred SIM" and select "GSM Network" under the "Data Service" field. That way you can still connect to T-Mobile's 3G network. 8. Connect the iPhone to your computer through USB and open the Phone Configuration program. (You can also do this from the iPhone.) 9. Open "Edify" and set the "Dialler Type" to "Instant Messaging." Set the "Dialler Number" to the phone number associated with the T-Mobile SIM. 10. Click OK to close the program, then click OK again on the next window that pops up and let's you change the "Dialler Number." Click OK on the final window, and your iPhone is ready to use for instant messaging. 570a42141b
