Firefox Quantum – In Depth - naish ===== ndersho "Opera is the company behind the Opera browser, an open-source web browser that functions similar to Firefox. However, Opera is not associated with ElectroSoft Corporation, the company behind the Opera browser. [Opera has changed a lot of things, but I'd recommend it to advanced users only. For regular users, Firefox Quantum is the best browser available." That's an incredibly misleading statement. ~~~ metalliqaz If you read the article you will see he is talking about what kind of people use Opera, not the product itself. ~~~ O_H_E I think he meant that he doesn't use Opera, but the original Opera browser is a thing, a thing that Opera wouldn't want to own the brand name of. ----- toyg In the end, I fear that the current state of browser warfare is helping no one (except the big companies that are on-the-fence about supporting Web standards and who could benefit from shoving their competitors out of the way). Apple and Microsoft are doing a better job than Google in fostering/instructing/insourcing their browser engineering. I think the end is still far, but it may actually get there. That said, Chrome may not stand its ground if someone can get them to implement the DNT header... sadly Chrome also has a good number of more serious security issues at the moment, and I really can't see them being eliminated any time soon. Share this: Like this: Related Ursula K. Le Guin has written a science-fiction book. Isn't that amazing? At eighty-four, her body is so frail she can't go out at night, she lives in a wheelchair, and her eyesight is gone. And yet, Ursula Le Guin can still go out at night,
