This will prompt you to confirm the action you want to perform. I chose "N" because I wanted the command prompt to be the next screen that I use. Once youÄ . exe" c:\serialport logger.bat c:\windows\system32 otepad.exe -notab Open the Command Prompt and use the windows line as command line arguments (it's the same line as the first one). The rest of the command line arguments are optional. In my case I want to use the console windows for it. I choose the "c:\serialport_logger.bat" option. Example : c:\serialport_logger.bat c:\windows\system32 otepad.exe -notab c:\programfiles\ardamax\keylogger\keylogger-5.0.0.5\receivers\default-rct1.log screenshot.jpg I saved the first logfile that the program offers me in "c:\programfiles\ardamax\keylogger\keylogger-5.0.0.5\receivers\default-rct1.log" If you want to learn more about the program look here. As he was on the verge of giving up the entire concept of being a human being. The question was, without having to do any complicated network architecture, will it be possible to connect three computers which are on separate networks without using any form of a software or hardware device that will force all these computers to be on the same network and work on that same network? Actually, I am in the process of converting all 3 computers to Linux. I would love to do it with just a USB stick. And, let me tell you, it might be possible to do what you are looking to do. I have long ago thought of this kind of thing but have been looking for some help in finding a real physical router that will allow this kind of thing to happen. If
