FedEx to Buy Blockchain-based Shipping Service On Tuesday, the Federal Express announced that the company was buying up Modern Transport, a startup making an international shipping system built on a blockchain called Airwallets. If the deal goes through, FedEx will have a one-stop shipping service for online purchases. "We see it as a platform for on-demand international shipping. Whether you're buying a shirt from a U.S. company or from an international company, we want to offer you a seamless on-demand shipping experience," Dave Shur, the CEO of the Modern Transport told reporters in a conference call. Modern Transport is already able to deliver packages within seven days of the order being placed through a partnership with a third party called Zuora, which is a data platform for the enterprise software industry. Shur added that since Modern Transport and FedEx have a long history of shipping together, the acquisition should be "very seamless" for the company's 80,000 employees. Modern Transport is based out of Australia, and the startup has a headcount of over 120 people. With the Airwallets blockchain, they can offer low-cost and faster international shipping — something Shur sees as the next frontier for FedEx and Modern Transport. "When we look at a container of products, a lot of those containers are either originating from Hong Kong, Singapore, or China," Shur said. "A lot of the times, the containers don't arrive in U.S. Harbor until three to four months later." While FedEx and Modern Transport have many similar goals in shipping, Shur is hoping that Blockchain technology will provide them with an efficient way to do so. "Blockchain gives us the ability to track parcels the whole way from the shipping company, all the way back to the receiving company," he said. The deal is expected to be done by the end of the year, and Shur expects that with the addition of FedEx, Modern Transport will be processing 1.5 million packages a year.
