Littleton was the team's top reserve last season, and he has the ability to contribute in both the running and passing games. Littleton, who was taken in the fourth round of the 2016 NFL draft out of Colorado, had eight tackles in the Rams' exhibition opener at Houston. McVay said that they would be looking for someone to provide more help for the run defense. That could potentially come in the form of rookie inside linebacker Samson Ebukam or outside linebacker Sam Shields, although both have played extensively on special teams in the first two exhibition games. I am trying to start my Spark job using spark-submit. The dataset used by the Spark job is stored in S3 and fetched to the Jupyter. I want to set this Spark job, so that each time I start Jupyter, the latest dataset is fetched from S3, so that I do not have to export the datapreview everytime to see if the job is up to date or not. I want to follow the approach mentioned here: How to load the most recent dataset into a Jupyter/pyspark notebook? But that is not working. The code: import dask.dataframe as dd from dask.distributed import Client client = Client('xxx-xxxx-xxx.c2.xxxx.com:7020', 'username', 'password') ds = client.kernels.hot.hot_dataset(KEY_LOCATION) dd.compute().run(ds) Error: ValueError: You need to provide a valid metadata directory in spark.sql.shuffle.io.metadata.dir when using SQLContext.SparkContext.setConf. How to fix this? A: PySpark is based on the ability of a Jupyter Notebook to switch between different kernels (Python interpreters). While it should be easy to store a source of data when working on a notebook, if you want it to be the latest you don't want to copy it over every time, you want to re-read it from the source. So if your notebook is prepared to use multiple kernels, you need to make the following adjustment in your code. The call: client = Client('xxx-xxxx-xxx.c2.xxxx.com:7020', 'username', 'password') The adjustment: ds = client.kernels.jupyter.hot.hot 04aeff104c
