Room for improvement is plenty, and we'll continue to try to find out how it could be improved. Would a bit of tweaking at the code level be possible? As for the AI edits, our lightroom 3 experience showed us how to make them best. It was the same experience as lightroom 3 and photo studio, unlike picnic where the AI edit is a bit different as it seems to use AI for a lot more functions aside from the edits. I think the program will really benefit from updates that wouldn't take that much time and effort to implement. I'd like to see a bit of speed improvement on the steep learning curve and loading time. We know that many people are ready to use the AI now and it would be great to see people give it a try on a daily basis. It seems like it is finally starting to get great and people are expecting great things it would be great to see more people using it and the old alternatives is not that easy to use these days. It has been a long time in coming so I can't tell what the road towards that is but it is finally here. I'm happy with the changes we get so far on the demo version. I would love a bit more on the user interface side, mostly on exposure selection and auto white balance dialogs. Other keyboard shortcuts without autoshow tooltips would help a lot because most of the time I use the keyboard for that unfortunately. I think new features are on the horizon and the AI tools I have tried so far is something other competitors on the market should take notice from. Adobe Photoshop has been one of my favorite software brands for a long time now, and with the newest version, Adobe Photoshop CC 2014, I feel that the brand has gone off the deep end, and has gotten too complicated for the average user. While features such as Lightroom are nice, they can't keep up with the newest photoshop. With the introduction of subscription and cloud Document plans, this is just getting too much.
