Softros LAN Messenger 3.8.2 Crack Softros LAN Messenger 3.8.2 6.3.2 6.3.3.1 6.5.1.7.The present invention relates generally to a method and apparatus for providing a low voltage power supply to a radiofrequency (RF) load. More specifically, the present invention relates to a control module for applying a low voltage power supply to an RF load. In a typical radiofrequency (RF) system, a radiofrequency (RF) power amplifier receives an RF input signal at a relatively low voltage level. The RF power amplifier amplifies the received RF input signal to generate an RF output signal at a relatively high voltage level. One or more RF loads may be coupled to the RF power amplifier. The RF input signal may be, for example, an RF input signal generated by a modem, a wireless communication device, or any other type of RF device. The RF load may be, for example, a wireless device, a cellular telephone, a wireless network device, a wireless printer, an RF identification device, or any other type of RF device. For example, the RF input signal is generated by a wireless modem of a cellular telephone. The RF output signal is a transmit signal that is generated to send information (e.g., voice, data, or other information) over a wireless network. In some RF power systems, a variable voltage-to-DC voltage converter (or DC/DC voltage converter) receives the RF input signal and provides a DC output voltage that is higher than the RF input signal. The DC output voltage is the low voltage level for the RF power amplifier. The DC output voltage of the variable voltage-to-DC voltage converter may be coupled to a DC power supply that provides additional DC power for the RF power amplifier. Additionally or alternatively, a low-drop out (LDO) voltage-to-DC voltage converter may be coupled to the RF input signal and provides a voltage that is lower than the RF input signal to generate the DC output voltage. The DC output voltage generated by the low-drop out voltage-to-DC voltage converter may also be coupled to the DC power supply
