Q: How to turn off Java for Mac App Store app I am submitting my app to App Store for iOS and Android and for both I need Java. I was hoping I could simply turn off Java from the preferences and my app will not be rejected. I am not sure if that's possible.
Any suggestions? Thanks

A: You can (and you should) publish the Java version for iOS and Android without using the Java plug-in for Xcode or Android Studio. In fact, the Java version is included as part of the universal binary for iOS and it is shipped to consumers via the App Store and Play Store. If you choose to publish the Java version, it will be managed in the same way as any other third-party library. Instead of using the Java version, you can publish the native implementation that works with the application's code in Objective-C or Swift.

Depending on the specific functionality you need, this can be a simple process. The discussion of the native SDKs can be found here: If you intend to keep using the Java version, then there's no way to disable it. If you are using the Java version to build external products that you intend to distribute in other markets, then you will need to publish the Java version as a standalone product. You can learn more about how to do that here: Quantifying the sense of unconfident
