"I think we're moving into a post-mobile world," he said, "I think we'll have more and more phone-tablet hybrids, more and more stuff on the go and a smaller screen." "If you look at the values of people's lives, how they spend their day, there is less and less screen time," he says, "A phone is the most important thing in your life. No other thing matters more to you than your phone, for interruptions, for keeping people with you, for entertainment, for what you're doing, what you're eating, what you're reading, all of these things."

To be real-time and social and to learn and to play, that's what phones were first invented for

"I think people who have phones in their pocket all the time are like people who have two families. Those people don't have the kind of number of 'get to know each other better', 'Oh wow, look at all of the cool stuff I'm doing at this party', 'I can work on my iPad because I'm at the beach' kind of interactions that happen in a smaller screen world."

"The short version is that the phone is the most important thing in your life. We just have to change the business model to support the values around that."

You can find more presets and skin tone presets by other artists on the Blend Guide. To see when the new features were available, head to the Photoshop version history. The better you know Photoshop, the more likely you'll have rules that you follow without thinking about them. The next time you're creating a new image, consider the following:

- Avoid using the Crop Tool when you can use Guides or Boundaries.
- Avoid using the Lasso Tool when you can use the Magic Wand.
- Avoid using the Grow Selected Layer when you can use the Fill or Stroke.
- Avoid using the Hand tools when you can use Size or Fx.
- Avoid using the Move Tool when you can use the Move Selected Layer, Warp Layer, or Free Transform.
- Avoid using the Eyedropper when you can duplicate or use the Color Range.

From the perspective of someone working professionally, the less they have to think about creating a new file, the more likely they are to actually create a new file. In a similar way, the less time you spend clicking rings around the current file, the more likely you are to create a new image. Here's the approach that future pros will surely adopt:

- Save the current layer as a new image file, and rename it.
- Repeat steps 2-5, and save a document with each layer as a new image file.
- Use only the Layers, Channels, and Adjustments functions to work with layers.
- Use the Full Screen mode to make the most of your screen space.
