I want to change the direction of the vector  $\vec{b}$  so that a hemisphere is generated. Does anyone know how to do this? What I have done so far is just creating a new vector and starting at the origin. If I change  $\vec{b}$  and then do the normal vector computations, I get the tip of the vector at the origin. I want the tip to be exactly at the center of the hemisphere. A: The picture of the hemisphere that I gave in the comments works in the case where the vector is not perpendicular to the plane of the hemisphere. To solve the problem for a perpendicular vector you can either: Remember the perpendicular vector and subtract it from the vector. Convert the vector to a unit vector (this can also be done by dividing by the length of the vector) and use that unit vector as the perpendicular vector. In the second case, the length of the unit vector will be  $\sqrt{1^2 + 2^2 + 3^2} \approx 2.3$ , and  $\angle(\vec{v}, \vec{1}) = 60.31^\circ$ . Q: How to sort this in LINQ? Not sure how to sort this in Linq. Any help will be appreciated. `var itemst = from x in entity.Items select new {Id = x.Id, Name=x.Name};` A: The LINQ (LINQ to Objects, in this case) to do what you're talking about would look like this: `var item`
